Governor William Weld and Cardinal Bernard Law met last Wednesday morning at the Cardinal's residence in Brighton. The two men are polar opposites in the abortion debate, but did say that the meeting was productive.

Weld and Law meet in Brighton

By Chris Price

Massachusetts Governor William Weld met with Cardinal Bernard Law last Wednesday morning at the Cardinal's home in Brighton in what was termed a search for "common ground" by Weld.

The two men talked extensively at Brighton's St. John's Seminary about the recent violence at the abortion clinics in Brookline, as well as ways to prevent future violence. There were few concrete results, however, as both men still reside on opposite sides of the abortion debate.

"I think it underscores pretty vividly that representatives of almost polar opposite points of view can get together and search for common ground," said Weld, who has been a staunch supporter of the prochoice cause.

"To my mind, the fact that we had this discussion is in itself of tremendous significance," said Law at the press conference after the meeting.

According to Weld, the two did not discuss contraception or family planning, but instead concentrated on areas of agreement. Those topics included possible alternatives to abortion, as well as strengthened adoption programs; in particular, those in minority areas.

"The search for common ground may in itself lead to a lowering of the voices that fuel tension and violence," said Weld.

VFW decides on Smith Center

After many years, Cambridge St. property finds a buyer

By Chris Price

After many years of legal wrangling, the problems regarding the property next to the VFW Post at 406 Cambridge Street in Allston have apparently been resolved. According to sources at the VFW, it will be the new site of the Joseph Smith Community Health Center.

After a vote among members last Thursday, the approval was given by the post for the center to move from their current sight on 51 Stadium Way in Allston, where they've been for the last 20 years.

The Center would not comment on the pending sale. "I think that it was important that everyone in the post voted on it," said Bob Dunn, president of the board of directors of the post. "The land belonged to all the veterans, and they all had a say." The property, located at 396 Cambridge St., has been a vacant lot since the Washington-Allston School burned down. The VFW obtained the property after the city conveyed it to them in 1990, according to Mike McCormack, legal representative for the VFW.

"For the last 10 years, to their credit, the VFW has stayed with the land," said McCormack. "This is one of those rare occasions where everyone comes out a winner."

There have been many aborted attempts to build on the land after a fire in the late '70s, including a Bedworks factory. Sources close to the sale stressed that the VFW was not going to make a profit in the sale, and also stressed

A-B groups meet for peace talks

By Joseph M. McHugh

In a rare demonstration of cooperation, civic groups and business leaders of the Allston/Brighton community sat down together and pledged future dialogue at an Allston Board of Trade meeting last Wednesday.

Paul Berkeley, president of the Allston Civic Association (ACA), and Theresa Hynes, president of the Brighton Allston Improvement Association (BAIA), were invited to meeting by Frank Moy, president of the board, in a gesture of conciliation. The ACA and the BAIA are often seen as being foes of the Board of Trade.

At the meeting Hynes stated that, despite a reputation to the contrary, her group understands the needs of business people.

"It is not that we don't understand the needs of business people. Every BAIA president has been connected with a family business or been an executive in a business," she said.

"We represent the people who live in the neighborhood, the same people who patronize your businesses. I think our interests are the same. More dialogue, such as tonight, could build a better relationship," she added.

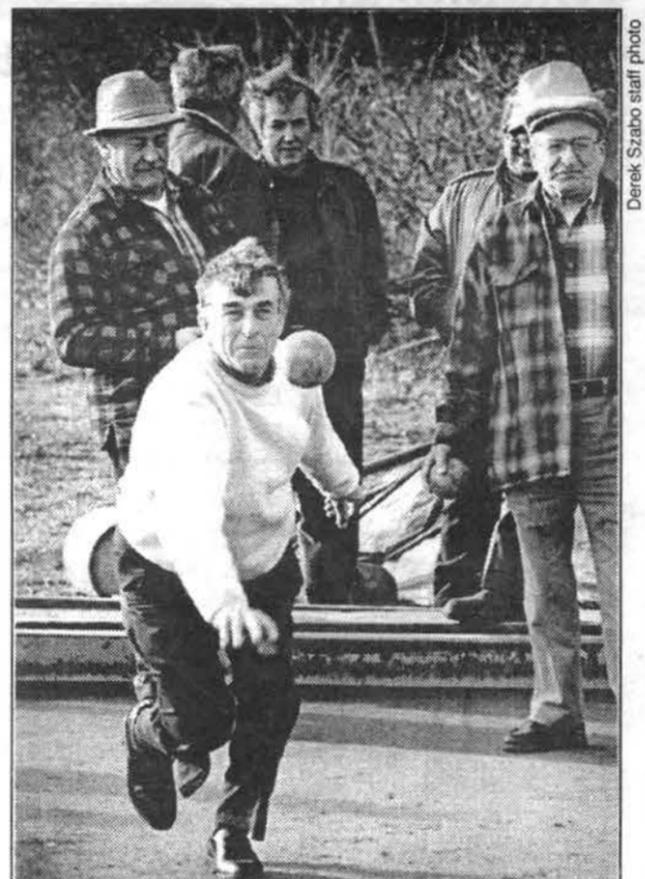

Berkeley stated that he felt his group has been unfairly labeled anti-business.

"Out of 27 proposals that went before us and the city last year we supported 19," Berkeley said. "One of the reasons for that is we sit down with business people in advance and work out exactly what they're trying to do and what their concerns are."

Also, the Board, after some discussion, agreed to support parking regulation changes on North Harvard Street and the Western Ave. area, changes that were previously agreed to at a meeting with Traffic Commissioner Frank Tramontozzi.

Another reason Moy invited Berkeley was to discuss of the parking problems in the Western Avenue and North Harvard Street area. In a meeting on December 13th of last year residents and business people complained to Tramontozzi about parking spaces being taken from residents and patrons of the area by outsiders. This group, which included Berkeley, committed itself to changing parking regulations in the area so that there would be a

SAT Test Prep Course

The S.A.T. course offered at the Boys and Girls Club of Allston's West End House is unlike any other in the Boston area. While it teaches all aspects of the verbal section of the S.A.T., it is based entirely on sports and sports writing.

Developed by Dr. Penelope Gharney, it incorporates sports materials in developing stronger verbal skills in preparation for the S.A.T. "Sports Illustrated" has donated free copies of its magazine which provide much of the material for the S.A.T. vocabulary and comprehension work, supplemented by newspaper articles and sports books.

In addition to their S.A.T. work, the students have the option of working on their college application essays or learning interview and sportswriting skills through class visits to local sporting events.

There is no fee for this course which meets every week, Thursday at 7 p.m. For more information, call the West End House at 782-6041.

Questions on Question 9? Call the MTO

With the recent chain of events regarding Question 9 and rent control, tenants in the Boston area are in greater need than ever of learning about the laws that affect them. The compromise legislation that extended rent control in some units for two years includes means testing for tenants. Tenants need to know what the income guidelines are and how they go about qualifying.

To see if you qualify for an extension, or if you need any other information about rent control, call the Massachusetts Tenants Organization at 367-6260.

Brighton's Cromonic was noted music writer

More is being found out about the man who died in the Oak Square fire last week. Rich Cromonic edited and published the well-regarded music magazine Sweet Potato for a time in the mid-1980's. He was also a regular writer at Rolling Stone and Musician Magazine, as well as working at an institute for the blind.

A memorial concert is planned for February.

UCB accepting applications for spring

A two-year college, the Urban College of Boston was established by Action for Boston Community Development (ABCD), Boston's official antipoverty agency to provide quality educational programs to Boston's poor and low-income people.

They are currently accepting applications for the spring quarter. Registration will be conducted at 178 Tremont St. in Boston through Jan. 26th. For more information, call the UCB at 357-6000, ext. 359.

Summer breezes?

One of the many statues outside of the Veronica B. Smith Senior Center appears to be enjoying the unseasonably warm temperatures last Sunday. It was recently announced by the city of Boston that the Smith Center was just one of the many Allston/Brighton locations to receive grant money in the previous year. Other places in the community included the Jackson Mann School, Oak Square and the Civil War Memorial at Brighton's Evergreen Cemetery.

Dreams realized for immigrants

By Joseph M. McHugh

Dreams and how to make them come true for new arrivals to this country was the subject of a forum held at the monthly Allston-Brighton police community meeting held at the Area 14 police station.

The participants, all recent immigrants to the United States agreed the melting process is not always easy for new groups, who face a variety of problems adjusting to a new culture.

The program, sponsored by the Healthy Boston Coalition, featured four recent immigrants, representing China, Korea, Colombia, and Russia who are settling in the Allston-Brighton area and who wanted to share their experiences as immigrants and their recommendations for what services are needed for their particular group.

"In order to make any dream come true you have to know how to dream first," says Min Kodjo an Allston-Brighton resident and recent immigrant from Korea.

"Koreans have no idea of the services available here," Kodjo continued. A large problem, she stated, is that the roles for men and women are different in Korea than in the US.

"For men coming here is a real culture shock," she said. "In Korea women are second class citizens. But here women have to work."

The challenge for social workers, she said, is to help Koreans, particularly male Koreans, out of their isolation so they can "enjoy what America has to offer."

Lucila Raigola, from Colombia, said the majority of Colombians, who come to the United States are students and have much to contribute professionally and technologically to the country. However, she said discrimination by Americans often keeps Colombians from contributing as much as they could. She said knowledge of the English language is a large need of this group.

Similarly, Faina Pokidova of Russia said educated people from her country who are older have experienced being unwanted in the U.S. These older immigrants came here for their children's sake and being well educated were looking forward to making large contributions to their new country.

"We wanted to give back to your society," she said. "But social workers told us that the economy was down, that language was a barrier, and that we were too old. We needed help but we were met by indifference."

Pokidova said that most of these immigrants from her country are Jewish and look to the Jewish Community in the U.S. for support, but because they were so cut off from their Jewish culture in Russia, they have no idea how to follow the religious services here. She said the congregations were friendly but indifferent. These immigrants, again, felt unneeded.

As a result of this lack of support, Pokidova said this group had no other choice but to turn to the welfare system for support. "And then we were criticized for being a drain on the municipal budget," she said.

Pokidova recommended that income support be available for this population. Also she recommended that the Jewish community set up cultural conferences to teach Jewish immigrants Jewish language and history.

The difficulties of Chinese immigrants was discussed by Fu Sheng Wu. He said this group faces job barriers and discrimination in this country.

"Many people won't hire you if your face looks different," he said. Wu also said that immigrants who don't speak English and don't have experience face natural barriers in the marketplace. He also pointed to police officials as a source of discrimination.

Wu's conclusion, "We should help each other and work together."

After their presentations, a member of the audience asked the panelists about the viability of the American dream.

"To make your dream come true you have to pursue it continuously," Kodjo responded.

"Of all the countries in the world that I have experienced this is the best," she added.

Weld and Law meet for talks

• COMMON GROUND

During the meeting, the Cardinal gave Weld a copy of the pope's new book "Crossing the Threshold of Hope." Law was in Rome last week, and said that he spoke with Pope John Paul II regarding a proposed moratorium on demonstrations at abortion clinics.

"I found the Holy Father very understanding," Law said. "It wouldn't be appropriate to quote him as saying, 'I agree with you.' It certainly is appropriate to say that I felt encouraged and supported by his understanding and by his blessing and by his assurance of his prayers."

Recently, Law has called for a moratorium on demonstrations outside of abortion clinics. His position has not been echoed by other Catholics as well as many anti-abortion groups, including New York's Cardinal O'Connor, as well as Operation Rescue, who held a sparsely attended gathering outside of a Beacon Street clinic in Brookline last Tuesday.

REAL ESTATE TIPS

HIRING A HOUSE INSPECTOR

J. Thomas Marquis

Naturally you will carefully inspect any home you intend to purchase as best you can. However, if you are not a building expert and you have some serious questions about the house's structure or systems, it makes sense to hire an independent house inspector to do a professional job. If this is your case, here are a few pointers.

Home inspectors are supposed to work FOR the buyer. The real estate agent is not the inspection expert and he or she will be the first to tell you. Hire a house inspector who is totally impartial. That means someone who simply inspects the house and submits the findings but does nothing whatsoever to correct any fault he may find. In that way, the inspector will not be motivated to "discover" a lot of extra faults as a means toward finding repair work.

The inspector should be knowledgeable enough to give approximate costs of repairs as a guide so the client can make an informed decision on the house.

Pharmacy Tips

by Charles P. Kelly
B.S., R.P.H.

MEDICATIONS AND SUN-SENSITIVITY

Patients should be aware of the fact that certain antibiotics contain chemicals that increase their skin's sensitivity to light (photosensitivity), thus promoting sunburn after even brief exposure to sunlight. Such antibiotics as ciprofloxacin, cotrimoxazole, and doxycycline are known to cause sunburn, rash, itching, scaling, and swelling of the skin within minutes to hours after sun exposure. Other than discussing the problem with their physicians and changing their medications, there is little patients with the potential for photosensitivity can do short of staying out of direct sunlight. Otherwise, it may help to cover up with clothing, wide-brimmed hats, and a conscientiously applied layer of sunscreen.

HINT: Some antihistamines, non-steroidal anti-inflammatory agents, tranquilizers, oral diabetic medications, diuretics, and anti-depressants may also cause photosensitivity.

VFW finds buyer for Allston property that the VFW was adamant that it was also going to sell the property to a non-profit organization.

The different members of the post are excited to helping the community.

"This is going to be a great thing for the people of Allston," said Vincent DeStefano, the post quartermaster. "I think that the community will find it easy to get to, and will provide them with the health care that many of them need."

McCormack has been excited about this project in particular, as he is a former city councillor and has been working for many years trying to do something with the land.

"I know this lot like my own house," he said. "I think the Allston community will really appreciate what the post has done to help them."

The next step has the three separate organizations - the city of Boston, the VFW Post and the Center - working together to get the deal done.

"Right now, it is just a matter of sitting down with the lawyers from the city and working out the sale," adds McCormack. "We're pretty enthusiastic about what happened."

two-hour parking restriction, in all streets of the area, including side streets, with an exemption made for those vehicles with residential stickers.

Moy said he objected to the plan because the area is mostly businesses, with a few scattered houses, and that residents should only be allowed to park in front of their dwellings.

"What I think you're going to see is residents of other parts of Allston and Brighton coming into this area to park and catch a bus, taking spaces away from business people," he said.

Berkeley, however, saw this scenario as very unlikely.

"There are not many parts of Allston-Brighton that aren't very close to a bus stop or train stop," he said. "I live in the middle of the neighborhood. I'm not going to drive two blocks to catch a bus."

"We should put it in perspective," he added. "The problem is we have hundreds of cars that don't belong to the area and that are not patronizing businesses. We shouldn't worry about cars coming from Allston to Allston."

Mark Wadness of Back Bay Movers, a member of the Board, asked Berkeley why the area should be any different from Commonwealth Avenue, where residents are only allowed parking in front of their dwellings. Berkeley said he would support changes in parking regulations there, as well.

In the end Hynes summed up the change in the dialogue between the civic and business groups.

"I remember calling the board of trade 11 or 12 years ago to ask for support in upgrading the appearance in the Harvard Avenue area and the president told me 'Why don't you mind your own business?' This really is a step further along."

Jones delivers in "Cobb"

By Chris Price

Ron Shelton, who directed "White Men Can't Jump" and "Bull Durham," has written and directed "Cobb," an unflinching look at the baseball legend, played by Tommy Lee Jones. It is a portrait of an angry, bitter and violent man through the eye of sportswriter Al Stump, played by Robert Wuhl.

Thirty-five years after his legendary playing career has ended, Cobb summons Stump to help write his autobiography. As they travel together across the country, from Reno to the Baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, New York, to Cobb's hometown of Royston, Georgia, Stump discovers a nasty, vile and bitter man who wants a whitewashed version of his legendary career.

Stump quickly realizes that he has a choice: Should he maintain the myth of the legendary baseball player, or should he write the real story behind the man filled with racism, bigotry, misanthropy and rage?

Combining Shelton's insightful portrayal of athletes (he was a minor league second baseman in the Baltimore organization), along with the peerless acting skills of Jones and Wuhl, "Cobb" creates a very unsettling portrait that examines an issue that is still very pertinent today: How should society treat sports heroes, even if they aren't the most up-standing people off the field?

Jones and Wuhl are eminently believable in their roles. Cobb did not suffer fools gladly, and you know that the ornery Jones is the same. Stump is a patient and open man; is real life, Wuhl apparently much the same person.

Eagle-eyed baseball (and music) fans will spot legendary Tigers radio announcer Ernie Harwell, good-time musician Jimmy Buffett and Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens in extended cameos. Clemens acquits himself very well as a Philadelphia A's pitcher who engages Cobb in a bit of glorious trash-talking. After Clemens knocks Cobb off the plate, Clemens woofs "Let's see how you like hitting from your back."

"Your mother always did," Jones yells back.

Baseball fanatics will also recognize the site of the Clemens/Jones encounter, as well as some of the other baseball exteriors, as being beautifully filmed at the ancient Rickwood Field in Birmingham, Alabama, home of the Birmingham Black Barons of the Negro Leagues.

“Egg Man” gets scrambled

An early morning incident last Sunday morning left an attacker with egg on his face, and a charge of malicious destruction of property.

At approximately 3:53 a.m., Kenneth and Jeffrey Hessert of Boston were attacked with eggs at the corner of Commonwealth and Washington while sitting in their car. After they stopped their car and were approached by the suspect, Paul DeRosa, an argument ensued. At that point, DeRosa allegedly punched the window, breaking it.

Officers then returned to the scene with the victims, who pointed out from where the eggs were thrown. Officers then spoke with the occupant, who identified DeRosa as the man who broke the window. He was placed under arrest, and charged with malicious destruction of property.

Fire mishap on Comm. Ave.

Last Thursday a Mattapan resident was arrested at 1089 Commonwealth Avenue for running over a fire hose while fire fighters were trying to extinguish a fire at that residence.

As Boston firefighters tried to douse the blaze, local policemen arrived on the scene shortly afterwards and began directing traffic.

According to police reports, Troy Footman of Mattapan then ran over the fire hose after being directed to back up by several firemen. Footman then flung his arm up at the firemen and fled Malvern Ave towards Gardner St. He was apprehended a short time later, and arrested.

Editorial

Remembering the wisdom of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

In the wake of the violence on December 30th, most anti-abortion protestors in the state of Massachusetts have practiced restraint. It is a stark contrast to what many witnesses have said they saw when people were escorted into the clinics.

Martin Luther King, Jr. showed what an effective tool civil disobedience was by bringing the cause of civil rights to the forefront of the American consciousness. Gandhi used it to bring the mighty British empire to their knees and liberate India.

To that end, we agree with the idea of nonviolent, civil disobedience. There must be a wide berth when allowing for free speech, and nonviolent protest comes under this umbrella.

But when the protestations begin to infringe upon the rights and lives of others, it ceases being discourse, and becomes a hackneyed, twisted version of what the founding fathers said when they established freedom of speech.

There will be protestors outside of 1031 and 1842 Beacon St. soon, regardless of what Cardinal Bernard Law says. They will be followed by counterprotestors, feeling anger and resentment towards their opponents. There will be death threats, intimidation and a ceaseless drumbeat to make people feel the way they want them to feel.

In an era when the line between the First Amendment idea of free speech and in-your-face vitriol has become horribly blurred (Thank you, Howard Stern and Rush Limbaugh), both the prochoice and prolife supporters must remember that King preached a theory of nonviolence and understanding. In this spirit, let both sides of the abortion debate come together and remember his words and philosophy.

Meeting was long overdue

The meeting last Wednesday between the Allston Civic Association (ACA), the Brighton Allston Improvement Association (BAIA) and the Allston Board of Trade was a great first step in a positive direction. These three camps have often been seen as warring factions that can never seem to get their disputes settled without pistols at ten paces.

Invited by Frank Moy, president of the board, were Paul Berkeley, president of the ACA and Theresa Hynes, president of the BAIA. They presented some new ideas regarding parking on North Harvard Street and Western Avenue, as well as other places in the area. They exchanged ideas, and helped each side understand each other a little more.

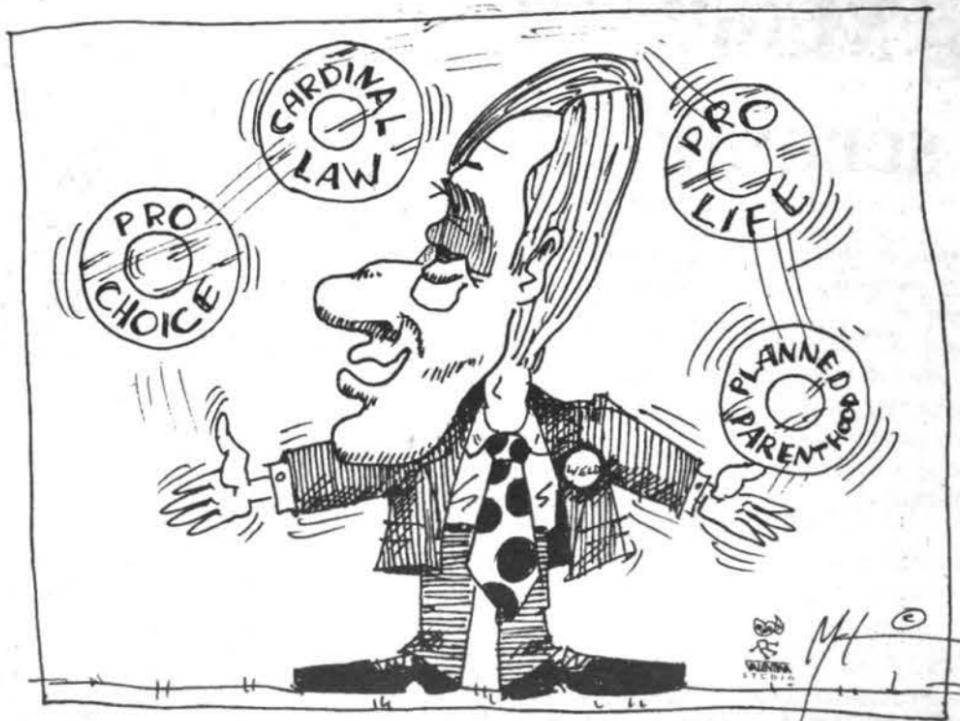

It is a small step, but one that is finally being taken. As Hynes said at the end of the meeting she could recall when the former president of the board told her years ago "Why don't you mind your own business?"

"This [meeting] is really a step further along," she said happily.

Indeed it is, and we applaud that.

A real crowd pleaser?

Bottom line

Communication is the key

What's the big difference between humans and animals? Communication! What's the most important element in communication? Understanding! So why is there a problem in communication here in Allston / Brighton?

In order to have proper communications, first, somebody must be sending a message. In Allston / Brighton, messages are sent by neighborhood activists such as the Allston Civic Association and the Brighton Improvement Association, and, occasionally, our official representatives in city hall and the state house.

Neighborhood activists receive official notices from city and state government, call meetings, and transmit the information to their memberships, who in turn, discuss situations and submit various propositions to popular vote. It is interesting to note that at no time are there more than a couple of hundred people included in this interplay, out of a population said to be in excess of seventy thousand.

Brighton has boards of trade made up of merchants conducting business in both areas and dedicated to the betterment of the community. For example, the Board of Trade contribute to scholarships on a yearly basis for local students. Also they contribute to Christmas lights etcetera.

This newspaper is an instrument of communication. Through it, with this column, we send a message to the Board of Trade. We need your help to keep the Harvard Ave. area from becoming a combat zone. Since tradesmen own and rent the most important properties in both sections they should be ever alert to blotting out the poison paint lettering of infectious graffiti afflicting the business district of Allston. Research indicates that areas submitted to intense graffiti bombing slowly slide into terminal dilapidation. Allston / Brighton was always a lively and interesting part of Boston and we'd like to keep it that way. With both boards of trade putting the heat on foot-draggers to get rid of graffiti we can turn this mess around.

Mind you, some of the local merchants have been fighting back week after week, month after month, year after year, painting out the mindless vandalism. The cops have been nailing these suckers right along too but the penalties have been too light and public opinion is never harsh on anything that doesn't affect each voter directly.

So, Board of Trade people, we're depending on you to break this problem down by dealing with all business owners in the name of public betterment. And while you're at it you might get around to inform newcomers that trash collection is only one day a week. All trash must be contained in a plastic bag tightly fastened and not be put out for pickup until the evening prior to pickup. One last thing - any week containing a holiday, trash will be picked up one day later than usual.

There it is. We've sent the message. If it is acted upon we're on the road to recovery. Can I hear a cheer for the Board of Trade?

Bruins alumni come out on top Allston-Brighton Sports Notebook

Sunday afternoon at Boston College's Conte Forum, a group of BC alumni took on the alumni team of the Boston Bruins. This game, like all others that the Bruins old-timers play in, was for the benefit of a number of charities.

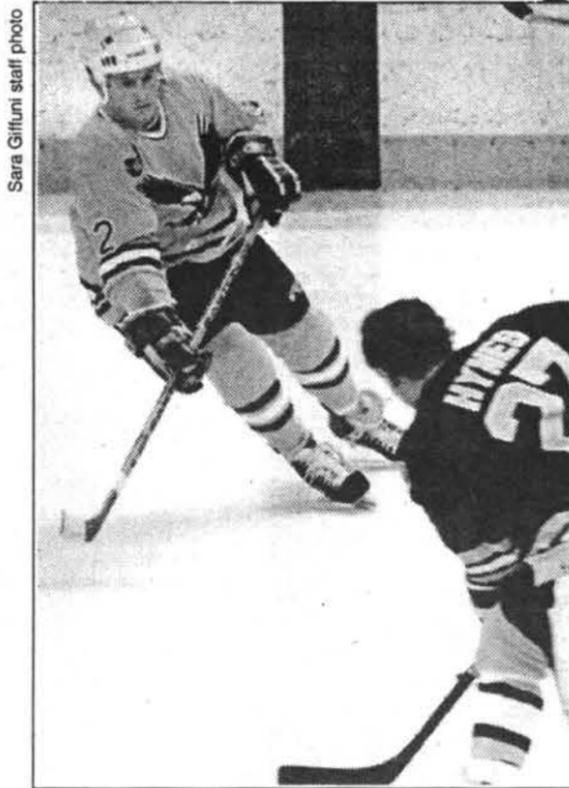

The game itself was very laid back, designed to be a fun time for the youth dominated crowd. It certainly lived up to those standards as everyone in attendance left with a smile on their face. In an entertaining contest, the Bruin alums came out on top by a score of 9-7.

The action on the ice was secondary as many people showed up to see some stars of old up close. The BC team was highlighted by the appearance of everyone's favorite Eagle, Doug Flutie. Flutie was more than happy to give something back to the community that has been so good to him over the years. "It's always nice to help out if I'm in a position to do it" said Flutie, "the guys from the Bruins have always been good about things like this."

The guys in the Black and Gold seemed to enjoy things too. Legends like Terry O'Reilly, Brad Park and 70-year old Johnny MacKenzie all played for the Oldie Black and Goldies, and Bobby Orr was one of the head coaches.

Bruins Alumni captain John Bucyk said that the games, in addition to helping out for charity are always a good time. He added, "We just hope we can enjoy the game without anyone getting hurt." No one did, and the two teams put on a great show.

-- Jeff Przech

The Bruins emerged winners Sunday, 9-7.

BC, BU sports roundup

By Jeff Przech and Eliot Schickler

The focus on the BC campus now turns to winter sports programs. Jim O'Brien and the men's basketball team must go on after losing four starters to graduation including current NBA players Bill Curley and Howard Eisley. This year's team is led by the lone returning starter, sophomore Danya Abrams. Currently, the Eagles hold a 6-6 record, but are 0-5 in Big East play. Recently, the Eagles have honed their edges with victories over Long Island University and the University of Hartford. The game against Hartford showed Abrams' talent as he scored 41 points to go along with 15 rebounds.

The BC hockey team has had a tough time so far this season. A pair of weekend dates against a weak UMass-Amherst squad was looked at to get the Eagles rolling again. In that contest, the Eagles got their scoring punch back with an 8-4 victory. Also in that contest, Boston College set a Hockey East record by scoring three shorthanded goals in one game. Yet the following evening, UMass earned their first Hockey East victory against the Eagles. BC was able to come back last week with a much-needed win over the Elis of Yale. The Eagle scoring punch returned again as the BC squad racked up a 7-5 win. Don Chase led the BC with a hat trick in that game, with David Hymovitz adding two goals. The win should prove pivotal as the Eagles prepare to face league rival Boston University twice this weekend.

Playing with a healthy and experienced lineup is making a big difference for the 1994-95 Boston University women's basketball team. With the return of forward Jill Sosnak and guard Sarah Coleman to the lineup, the Lady Terriers have catapulted to a 9-2 record.

With the return of Sosnak and Coleman, BU's best player, Julie Schmidt returns to her natural shooting forward position.

The highlight of the season so far was an impressive 92-62 home win over Hartford. In that contest, Schmidt led the Terriers with 16 points, while Sosnak and Coelman each had 14 points.

"We played team defense, we played team offense, it was our best game of the season," said head coach Christine Basile. "If we continue to improve every night the way we have, we can pack our bags in March because we'll be a part of March Madness."
